A great rider will give to the horse the gift of soundness."

Science of Motion is a new approach to training and therapy that is based upon identifying and correcting specific gait abnormalities inherent in each horse and equally important, adjusting the rider's posture and position. Jean Luc Cornille, Maitre (Master) from the Cadre Noir de Saumur "Trainer of Trainers", an international level Three-Day Event rider and trainer, has extensively studied equine anatomy and movement. His research has allowed him to develop a method that can be used to help the horse learn to move correctly and efficiently, resulting in lightness, self-carriage, and the ability to reach its full athletic potential without injury. Every horse moves differently. None move perfectly, especially with a rider on their back. Even minor defects in gait can eventually result in lameness or suboptimal performance. As with human athletes, careful analysis of how a horse moves and the use of an individualized training program can enhance performance.
